

Food for thought

- The boundaries of language are the boundaries of the world.
(L. Wittgenstein)
- Intercultural learning starts at home.
- Without the knowledge of a foreign language you will never understand the foreigner's silence. (St. J. Lec)
- For successful intercultural encounters you have to know more about your own culture than any other.
- For language being the great conduit, whereby men convey their discoveries, reasonings, and knowledge, from one to another.
(J. Locke)
- Before you react to what is different see where you can interact with what you have in common.

Fremd ist der Fremde nur in der Fremde (K. Valentin)